Stamp — your inbox, finally worth opening

Strangers stake real money to reach you. Legit messages get their stake back. Spammers fund your coffee.

Stamp turns your inbox into a tiny marketplace for your attention — every cold message arrives with a refundable $0.25 USDC stake. You decide if it was worth your time.

Why Your Inbox Is Broken — and What Actually Works

The Asymmetry

It costs a spammer $0.0001 to message you. It costs you 30 seconds. Multiply by 50 a day.

What We Tried

Spam filters, unsubscribe links, CAPTCHAs, priority AI — all still require reading everything first.

What Actually Works

Make the sender put up collateral. Real intent has skin in the game. Spam doesn't.

This idea was proposed in 1997 as "hashcash" — it never shipped because moving 25¢ at near-zero cost was impossible. Now it is. That's the entire thesis.

How It Works & Who It's For

Sender ✉️

Sign up, get a USDC wallet instantly — no seed phrase. Compose, pay a $0.25 stamp. Get refunded the moment the recipient confirms you weren't wasting their time.

Recipient 👀

See only stamped messages. AI triage sorts obvious spam in one tap. Refund the keepers. Forfeit the spam — that money is now yours.

Who Wants This

Founders, investors, journalists, open-source maintainers, recruiters — anyone drowning in noise. And AI agents bidding for human attention at scale.

Revenue Model

Stamp keeps 5% of every forfeited message — no subscription, no SaaS. At 10k messages/day with 10% spam: $12.50/day, linear with usage.

Viable only on Arc + USDC nanopayments — sub-cent settlement makes the economics close. Every other rail loses money on a 25¢ transfer.

Roadmap

01

Reputation (ERC-8004)

Senders build a public refund rate — sort by trustworthiness × stake.

02

Reply-Pricing (x402)

Bill senders for a written response, not just a read.

03

Agent Inbox MCP

Autonomous agents triage stamped inbounds on your behalf.
